LATEST EDITION OF COPPER MEN'S BIBLE

Volume X of Steven's Handbook Is Now On the Market.

Vol. X, the tenth annual edition of the Copper Handbook, is just received. The new issue of this work, which is considered a standard authority on the subject of copper and copper mining for the entire globe, has 1,992 octavo pages, containing nearly 1,500,000 words, and, in addition to the miscellaneous chapters, lists and describes 8,130 copper mines and copper mining companies, in all parts of the world, this being the largest number of titles ever listed by any work on mining. The descriptions range from two or three lines, in the case of dead companies, wherein reference is made to detailed description in past volumes at the period of their activity, up to twenty-one pages, in the case of the Anaconda mine, which yields one-eighth of all the copper made in the world. The miscellaneous chapters of the book, twenty-four in number, treat the subject of copper from all possible viewpoints, there being chapters on the history, mineralogy, metallurgy, brands and grades, alloys and substitutes for copper, with a copious glossary, and a chapter of statistics ending the book that contains 40-odd tables, thoroughly covering copper production, consumption, movements, prices, dividends, etc. The Copper Handbook is sold on the unique plant adopted nine years ago, the publisher sending the book by mail, prepaid, to any address ordered, without advance payment of any sort, and subject to return after a week's inspection. The price is $5 in a strong green buckram binding with silk headband and gilt top, of $7.50 in full library microcosm. Anyone interested in copper, as a producer, consumer or investor in shares, would do well to write the author and publisher, Mr. Horace J. Stevens, Houghton, Michigan, ordering a copy of the new Copper Handbook sent prepaid, subject to approval.

CHLOROFORM WAS FATAL TO WOMAN

A suicide or the victim of murder, the body of Mrs. D. C. Collier was found today at noon by a friend named Juana Walker, lying on the bed of the woman's room in a house which they occupied at the corner of Third Ave and 17th street, says the Tucson Citizen.

In her mouth and over her nose was a cloth saturated with chloroform, while nearby was a bottle of chloroform, about two-thirds full. Circumstances tended to a belief that death occurred some time last night. Mrs. Collier was last seen by Mrs. Walker about 11 o'clock in the night.

The discovery of the body, according to information given Coroner J. E. Dutton, was occasioned by the fact that Mrs. Collier was accustomed to preparing a noon meal for her friend. Therefore when Mrs. Walker returned to the house at noon, and found no preparations made for the meal, she entered Mrs. Collier's room and found her body.

No motive for suicide is known, further than it is alleged that the woman was given to intervals of melancholia, in one of which some years ago she is alleged to have attempted to end her life by shooting herself. On the other hand, there were no indications of murder, further than that it is declared to be the inevitable tendency of people going under the influence of chloroform to attempt to push the cloth or sponge away from them.

Mrs. Collier was about 40 years of age, and had been a resident of Tucson for about 12 years. The coroner's inquest will be held late this afternoon.

Stop coughing! you rack the lungs and worry the body. BALLARD'S HOREFOUND SYRUP checks irritation, heals the lungs and restores comfortable breathing. Price 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by Elvey & Hulet.

GOOD NIGHT. The white stars blossom in the skies, Like daisies strewn in azure aisles; I miss but two—the gentle eyes That greet me with your smiles.

Love's small a stromy is mine Who missing these miss all the rest; I hate these rival lights that shine To mock my lonely quest.

Good night, and may the angels keep Their faithful watches o'er each lid, Behind whose fringes, bathed in sleep, A torquoise say is hid.

BALL FANS GALLERY OF NOTABLES

(Copyright 1911 by W. W. Aulick.)

ELMER STRICKLETT, Master of the Moist. Whether or not Bobby Matthews of the Bygones was in the possession of the spitter during his pitching activities is a question rather difficult of deciding at this 1911 date. Some say he had. Some say he was simply a determined tobacco-chewer, and that one day when he used a baseball in lieu of a mouchoir, the moistening gave the ball the odd movement which now is in a certain favor. Anyway, no matter what the merits of the Matthews claim, it is pretty well authenticated that to Elmer Stricklett of a latter day belongs the credit of discovering the spitter for the baseball moderns.

Master Elmer was a prop to the Brooklyn edifice, a gentleman who kept his own counsel and never unnecessarily tipped his play. After going along for a considerable time without attracting much more attention than comes naturally to a fairly effective flinger, Mr. Stricklett one day put over a puzzler that was as hard to hit as the double 6 on the roulette wheel. The batsman of the time didn't just know how to describe it, but he was certain the ball wasn't anywhere in the neighborhood when he swung for it. Stricklett played for a repeat, and again there was a mysterious drop of the ball just as it should have cut the plate. Once more the motion, and the ball fell flat this time to the right of the batter, whereas the previous ones had topped to the left. The batter looked foolish, and the catcher looked scared, and Elmer Stricklett chanted doggedly on something or other in his capacious mouth.

Then they noticed that the ball was wet as seaweed and twice as slippery. They also noticed that before delivery, Elmer conveyed the pill to his orifice and apparently whispered instructions. Closer study developed the fact that Stricklett was moistening the ball for each attack, and that was how the spitter came into public notice.

Stricklett covered the entire sphere with the exception of a little space where he rested his fingers for the hurl. He put no spin on it, but sent the ball straight as circumstances permitted. The consequence was that when the momentum ceased—as it did about the time of approaching the plate—the ball dropped swifter than any ball had ever dropped before, after leaving a pitcher, for the reason that there was no spin on it to buoy it up. Being lacking in revolving motion, the drop was the sharpest thing, when it did come, that ball players had ever experienced.

Stricklett found that the effort was harder on his pitching arm than any other form he had ever used. This didn't dissuade him from using the novelty, because it was effective, and that was what he was after. But after a time Stricklett came to see the consequences. Others followed him in the spitterball specialty met with saddening surprises. There, for example, was old Happy Jack Chesbro. He cultivated the Stricklett spitter, even though each fling gave him a painful wrench. It was found that the pitcher had to do certain amount of following up or the ball, being unable to snap the spitter off with a half-arm motion as could be done with a dry ball. Happy Jack kept at it while he had nearly torn off a pennant for the New York Americans and an arm for himself. Then he quit and is still quit.

Elmer Stricklett's development is a wonderful aid to a pitcher who can control it, and has an iron arm. Anybody with these qualifications is hereby licensed to practice.
